AGGREGATES $33,488

Public Schools Report Great Enthusiasm in Disposal of the "Baby Bonds."

ALL MAKE SPLENDID SHOWING

Colored Schools Come to Fore: Bethlehem Lutheran Parochial School Makes Especially Good Showing.

With sales amounting to $33,488 reported for yesterday, the pupils of the city schools have already more than doubled their original allotment, and at the close of the fifth day, the record stands but a scant 1,000 short of the $100,000 mark, the total receipts during the first five days of the drive amounting to $38,675.25.

All the white schools have now passed their quotas, and but two of the colored schools remain where the original allotment has not yet been raised. When comparison is made to the sheet showing the original apportionments, the results obtained by the youthful salesmen are indeed surprising, for in some instances over eight times the original amount has been recorded.

This will be the last day of the campaign, and the school buildings will remain open until 11 o'clock, in order to give the youngsters an opportunity to turn in additional orders, and to bring from the enthusiasm manifested by the pupils in every institution in their endeavor to return their school the winner, the total sales will be triple the amount originally expected. But in order to assure Richmond the first place in the State-wide contest, Assistant Superintendent of Schools Binford urges every citizen, who can buy stamps at this time as well as a few days later, to turn in his order for the children before 11 o'clock this morning.

The figures announced for the State last night were in excess of $300,000. Norfolk was leading with $123,000; Richmond, second, with $88,000; and Portsmouth, third, with $18,000. The other cities reported as follows: Lynchburg, $17,000; Roanoke, $11,000; and Petersburg, $10,000. In announcing the result, the directors pointed out that the total sales were about three times greater than had been expected.

ALL OF THE SCHOOLS MAKE GOOD SHOWING

Almost every school in the city has made such a splendid showing that it is almost impossible to point to any particular institution as having been superior to the others, all circumstances considered. However, as space permits, a few striking examples are taken at random to prove that the children have entered heart and soul into the campaign.

The pupils of the John Smith School, who were awarded the $1,000 order for the best showing during the first two days of the drive, have reported sales totaling $1,463.75, which is more than eighteen times their original allotment.

Although credit was given them yesterday, the pupils of Bethlehem Lutheran have done so extremely well that it is felt they are once more deserving of special mention. With a total attendance of thirty-five, these children have disposed of stamps totaling $1,545.25, which means that the per capita sales were $43.81.

Another school with but a small roster which has done particularly well is the Vacation School, located in the old Bellevue Building. The thirty-two boys of this institution, with an original allotment of $150, were credited by the officials last night with sales amounting to $447.25. Arents School, attended exclusively by small children, has accounted for four times its original quota.

Among the schools at the head of the list, the Ruffner School deserves special mention for the results obtained. The total sales to date are $8,281.25, or eight times the maximum amount expected. The per capita sales at this school amount to approximately $25.

COLORED SCHOOLS COME FORWARD SPLENDIDLY

The colored schools came to the fore splendidly yesterday, selling over $1,000 worth of stamps. Baker, the largest school in the old Jackson Ward, reported a total of $1,538.75. Buchanan School disposed of securities amounting to $700, while the students of Moore School finished strong with $500.75 to their credit for the day's work.

The figures, as announced last night by the officials in charge of the campaign, are as follows:

Hun Royalty at Arm's Length

Boxing Instructor of the Kaiser's Family Writes Interestingly of Experiences.

BY J. P. SLIM.

Eighteen Months in the Service of the Emperor at Potsdam.

(Copyrighted by J. P. Slim. Furnished by the International News Bureau, Inc.)

"That is very curious," I said, and told Count Baudessin what Prince Friedrich Karl had said about the Kaiser's feeling that the British fleet had come uninvited and undesired.

KAISER MADE NO SECRET OF HIS DISPLEASURE

"Yes," he said, "he made no secret of his displeasure at the appearance of the warships, and that was before the murder took place. At Cologne I found that the assassination seemed to have been almost forgotten, and when I spoke to my well-informed German acquaintances about the disturbing things I had heard in Berlin, they shrugged their shoulders and said: 'The Prussians are always dreaming about war.' It was quite true that the excitement and uneasiness did not compare with what was manifested at the time of the 'Agadic incident.'

An elderly American of my acquaintance, who had business relations with Hamburg and was on terms of some intimacy with Herr Ballin, completely dispelled all remaining fears I felt. His daughter had been betrothed to a young German naval officer, a man of good family, but a younger son, and with no means except his scanty pay. He had to receive official sanction for his marriage from the army and navy, the bride had to deposit in the bank a dowry sufficient to allow the marriage to take place. In this case the sum required was 12,000, and the girl's father, my American acquaintance, had taken the money to the bank for the purpose.

To his surprise, some formal objection to receiving it was raised, and he was to go without depositing the money. The girl wrote to her fiancé, and in reply received a puzzling letter. I gathered that it did not shake her faith in the officer, but hinted at obstacles, and asked her to wait before making a formal betrothal, which was to be announced and the business clinched by the deposit of the dowry.

My American friend thereupon suspected that trouble might arise from the Sarajevo incident, and determined to ask Ballin, as a man who was more or less in the confidence of the Kaiser, whether there was any possibility of a European war.

Ballin laughed very heartily, and naturally, when the question was proposed to him. Then, taking a list of the Hamburg-American sailings, he handed it to the querist.

"If we supposed that a great war was imminent," he said, "do you think that we would have nearly 150,000 tons of our shipping on the high seas, at the hazard of any chance that might destroy the vessels? If my assurance is of any value to you, there will be no war as the result of Sarajevo; only some diplomatic exchanges."

That settled the question for me, and I put it from my mind, like everybody else. Nobody made any difference in the treatment accorded to us, there was not a sign of any lurking hatred or distrust of English people in West Germany.

The storm was the more surprising and alarming when it suddenly burst. When we arrived in Düsseldorf we went to see the British consul as a matter of course. To my great relief and delight, he turned out to be a man of British birth.

This was a change after Cologne. The experience of myself and my brother at that place deserves to be recorded for the war purposes. Ever since leaving Germany I have been very chary of recording personal opinions, preferring to allow other people to draw their own conclusions from such experiences as I may have endured. But one of the lessons this war should rub home is surely the necessity of confining our consular service to people of British birth and proved patriotism.

My brother and I called upon the British consul at Cologne at 2 in the morning on August 6, when Great Britain's proclamation of war upon Germany had been officially confirmed. We found a stout German porter just pulling down the roller which closed the office, and with malicious satisfaction he informed us that the place was closed. "Clear off," he ordered, in his most neutral German.

"We intend to see the British consul, whether the place is closed or not," I answered, and we pushed past him. He struggled and protested at the top of his voice, but my brother and I ignored him, and penetrated to the office, which was situated in the Don Platz, Cologne.

Hearing the disturbance, another stout man appeared, and speaking in English, asked what was the matter. His English was excellent, but nobody could have mistaken the German accent of the man.

It never occurred to me that this obvious Hun could be our consul, so I told him that I wished to see the British consul.

"I am the British consul," he replied.

GOVERNOR CALLS FOR DETAILED REPORTS

Wants Members of Defense Council to Tell What They Have Done.

MAY REPLACE INACTIVE ONES

State Auditor C. Lee Moore Is Added to Membership of Council, and Other Heads of Departments or Institutions May Be Named.

State Auditor of Public Accounts C. Lee Moore was yesterday added to the list of the members of the State Council of Defense by Governor Davis. It is understood that one or two other department heads or heads of State institutions may be added, as it is shown that their services can be made use of.

The Governor yesterday addressed a letter to each member of the council calling for a detailed report of his activities in reference to war work. Attention is called to the fact that the council as at present constituted is vested with the power "to utilize the existing staff of assistants and employees" in the department of the various members in carrying for such additional duties as membership on the State Council of Defense may involve. Moore's office, there was an undercurrent around the Capitol to the effect that such members of the Council of Defense as have been inactive may be dropped from its roll, or may give way to other officials who will be more active in carrying on the business of the council.

The Governor's letter follows: "I am writing to inquire what war activities have been initiated or conducted by you or by your individual members, who are in charge of State departments, up to this time."

"I wish further to ask for a detailed report of the work that you or your members as heads of the State departments are proposing to do for the future in aid of the war."

"On February 8, 1918, the Virginia Council of Defense, as now constituted, was created by the act and at the time of the appointment thereof the State officers now composing its membership. I authorized them to utilize their existing staff of assistants and employees in the departments in carrying for the additional duties which their membership on the State Council of Defense would involve."

"I feel that the Virginia Council of Defense, which embodies all of the public activities of the State, offers a great opportunity for constructive patriotic service, which I am sure you and each of your members will be glad to render in aid of our great national effort to speedily win the war."
